Commentary

Markets were choppy and rangebound in June, with equity and bond indices ending the month relatively close to where they started it. In terms of news flow, there were important developments in continental Europe. In France, President Macron surprisingly called a snap parliamentary election, with the first round of the vote held on 30th June, in response to a weak showing in European elections early in June and in the hope that a campaign would solidify support for his centrist party. With the far-right Rassemblement National polling well and meeting those expectations in the first round, this gamble looks uncertain to pay off and resulted in French government bond yields climbing and the national stock market, CAC 40 (-6.4%), falling sharply. With a left-wing alliance also gaining ground, investors sense a move away from the centre ground with risks to fiscal stability possible and a more confrontational approach to the EU likely, though the second round of the vote still promises a range of outcomes including a hung parliament. The performance of the French equity market weighed on other European bourses too, with the Eurostoxx 50 ending June down 1.8%, underperforming the likes of the FTSE 100 (-1.3%) and Nikkei 225 (+2.9%) in local currency terms. The strongest region in June was the US, with the S&P 500 adding +3.5% and the technology-focused NASDAQ 100 gaining +6.0% as American stocks continued to perform well. The portfolio's best performer was Edgewood US Select Growth (+7.2%) which has been well-positioned in technology-related companies. Most other equity holdings also posted positive returns, including a pleasing gain for Aubrey (+4.7%) as some emerging markets performed well. In Brussels, the European Central Bank reduced interest rates by 0.25%, its first move in a cutting cycle which is expected to continue over the coming year. While they are likely to tread slowly, recent inflation and growth data was deemed sufficiently weak to allow scope for a cut. In the UK, the Bank of England did not follow suit, keeping rates on hold while it awaits more evidence of services inflation slowing down – should more confidence about this be gained, then a cut in August is a possibility. The Bank may also have been unwilling to shift policy so close to an election, which is due on 4th July. There has been little reaction in UK assets to the election campaign, with a Labour majority seen as a foregone conclusion and considerable continuity and orthodoxy expected in the new government's approach. Fixed Income returns were positive during the month, with most holdings returning in the region of +0.8%. The best performance came from iShares UK Core Gilts (+1.3%) as upward pressure on bond yields eased. Our Alternatives allocation exhibited mixed performance, with some holdings rising and others falling, including a loss for Winton Trend (-1.8%) after a strong run in recent months.
